Brent Cross regeneration- Have your say

Liberal Democrat campaigners Pauline McKinnell and Steven Deller have been calling on local residents to find out your views about the proposed redevelopment south of Brent Cross.

We are concerned about

- The high rise of the development and its density (7,500 flats)
- The demolition of the existing homes (Whitefields estate), the shops (including Tesco) and the Hendon Sports Centre

Pauline McKinnell collecting signatures for the Liberal Democrats' petition about the Brent Cross redevelopment

Instead, we support:

- Low rise housing
- Families who want to move from the tower blocks should be re-housed in family friendly properties
- Existing parks and green spaces should remain

Steven Deller at Clarefield Park: "Liberal Democrat Councillor Susette Palmer was very involved in establishing this prize winning park. It will be lost if this redevelopment goes ahead."

I oppose high rise and over dense development in place of the Whitefields estate

Improving our area

Honora Morrisey has successfully persuaded the Council to plant six new trees and install four litter bins in Somerton Road, between Thorverton Road and Claremont Road

Better public transport

Transport for London has agreed to expand the service on the 102 bus to 24 hours a day after a long campaign by Liberal Democrats across North London. But Nick Russell Liberal Democrat candidate for the London Assembly said more needs to be done: "Tube improvements are only for show—new tiles but not new signals. Congestion is no better now than in 2000."

Cutting crime

Brian Paddick, Liberal Democrat candidate for Mayor of London, has pledged to cut crime in London by 5% every year during his first term. And if he doesn't reach his target to cut crime after four years, he won't stand again for Mayor. Brian plans to chair the Metropolitan Police Authority to hold the Metropolitan Police Service to account for its performance in reducing crime. He will take real action to get guns and knives off our streets.
